Sarkis to Stay

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP)—President Elias Sarkis bowed to Lebanese and international pressure today and withdrew his threat to resign, the Presidential Palace announced

The 53-year-old Lebanese president resolved to resign last week after six days of heavy clashes between the nation's right-wing Christian militias and Syrian forces of the Arab League peacekeeping army.

Declared Dead

The son of a Marshfield man who was downed over Laos in November 1969 has been de-clared officially killed in action by the U.S. Air Force. Staff Sgt. Charles R. Fellenz, son of Herbert and the late Annie Fellenz, 109 S. Cedar Ave., had his official status changed from missing in action to killed in action. Notification came in a letter dated

S.Sgt. Charles R. Fellenz

June 28.

Air Force records. Fellenz, 30 at the time, was flying as a flare operator on a C-130A aircraft on a mission, over Laos. His plane had departed from Ubon Airfield Thailand on Nov. 24, 1969, accompanied by two escort planes

In a heavily forested mountain area in Laos, the planes encountered anti-alreraft fire from the ground. While turning to avoid the fire, Fellenz's plane was hit, and went down, bursting into flames.

Pilots in the other two planes reported seeing no parachutes, and could not establish radio or ground contact with the eight crew members although they remained in the area for 30 minutes following the crash:

The Air Force also reported that Fellenz's name has not been released, as among the missing or dead ac-counted for by the Socialist Republic of Vietnam nor its allies. His name has also not surfaced in reports from prisoners of war whose network of information has been considered

Given this set of facts the Air Force said they were declaring Fellenz killed in action.

He is survived by a wife, two sons and a daughter, all of LaPalma, Calif. his father Herbert, Marshfield, and several brothers and sisters.

City Brief

READY TO RUN - The Marshfield Running Club will sponsor its biNotwood farm property, as an example of the type of "cooperation" extended by the city toward the towns.

They haven't worked with us one bit," Meyer charged. He also cited problems with road repairs as another xample. Wolf, however, backed Scheuer's tine of thinking. Noting that a large segment of the town of Cameron, formerly zoned agricultural, was zoned commercial when the town's zoning code was written more than a decade

Because of these problems. Wolf said he was willing to discuss zoning problems with the surrounding towns and the city.

Wolf added that the Norwood farm sale issue was a completely different one than extraterritorial zoning.

Developer Tom Lang told the group that lots in the city of Marshfield were becoming increasingly more expensive, and said zoning in the towns would drive lot prices up there as well.

His argument was countered by Wolf, who pointed out that as farm land is developed because strong zoning codes weren't enacted, the value of land rises sharply because of development potential. Wolf said land in his town has jumped in value to a greater degree that land in the city of Marshfield. With the value of the land going up. Wolf said, taxes have also risen dramatically.

"Through a way of managed expansion, we can save everyone tax dollars." Wolf added.

During the discussion, Meyer admitted he could not blame the city for wanting to take a look at the surrounding areas and to clean up problems before they developed and had to be solved by the city. But he repeated his objections to the city's zoning moves.

Pushing for a mutual review of zoning ordinances by the towns, Meyer said, "We have to realize we're next to city and we do have extra pressures."

In addition to meeting to review each other's codes, the group reached a con-sensus that should the Marshfield Common Council try to resurrect the ex traterritorial zoning resolution, they should lobby against it by appearing in opposition at the meeting, and by telephoning Marshfield aldermen with their objections.

Strikers

advisement as a strike by sanitation and other city workers was in its second day. The strike by about 2,000 Cleveland officers ended late Eriday after an Ohio state judge ordered the city and two police unions to arbitrate the dis-
