

SECRETARY HAWKINS CLUB

Dear Boys and Girls:
Hi, pals! Warm enough for you? 'Tis for me.
But so much for the weather, what you want to know is who won the prizes in our members' choice contest on "Fishing", "Memorial Day" and "Vacation". The winners are—

Ruth Schoechert, Route 1, Vesper, Wis. (Age 12) North Hansen school.

Leon (Giese) Worden, Route 2, Pittsville, Wis. Four Corner school.

Ardele Ehler, 1231 Eighth street south, Wisconsin Rapids, Wis. (Age 13) East Side Lutheran school.

Ruth wins an autographed Secretary Hawkins book, Leon chose the war stamps for second and Ardele selected the club stationery for third.

SATURDAY'S BIRTHDAYS
Jerry Ralph Buchholz, Nekosco, is 7 years old.

Earl William Anderson, 520 Grant street, is 12 years old.

Margaret June Musch, 1421 Seventeenth avenue south, is 12 years old.

Charles Robert Saeger, Route 5, is 6 years old.

Robert Edmund Donahue, Route 4, is 10 years old.

SUNDAY'S BIRTHDAYS
Carol Jean Cole, 1341 Elm street, will be 13 years old.

Delores Ruth Schafhauser, Wisconsin, will be 12 years old.

Lawrence Villeneuve, 341 Franklin street, will be 13 years old.

This year, just about every family has a victory garden with all you young people being required to do your share of the weeding, hoeing and the like. Many of you have gardens of your own, especially those of you who are 4-H club members.

Uncle Sam is interested because the food you are producing is vitally needed; I am interested, also, mostly because of the valuable experience you will gain through planting, caring for, and finally harvesting the vegetables you watched grow from tiny seeds.

Just remember that a garden needs a lot of care, and don't let the weeds get a head start.

Because everyone is going to be kept pretty busy this summer, I am declaring a vacation from contests until fall, which I hope will be satisfactory with the majority of you members. However, the club story will continue to run four days a week in this column, the birthday club will appear each day as in the past, and announcements regarding our weekly radio program will be made in this space each Monday. So long for now.

Yours fair and square,

Secretary Hawkins

Bench has reorganized. There is a new Boss and four new girls have been taken in, and I am one of the four. It is a little like our earlier lessons at Simpson's—a sort of handicraft class. At Simpson's everyone was very solemn and fearfully painstaking about it—here, in what Simpson's referred to in reverent tones as "actual Shop practice," there is a pleasant happy-go-lucky attitude.

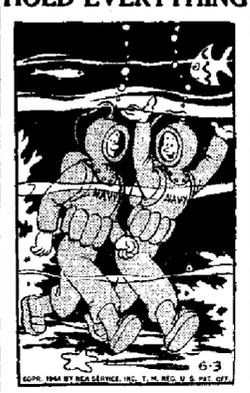

At Simpson's our first lesson was to learn the proper names for new tools—our finishing hammers, our mallets, our six-inch scales, not "rulers." Here at Kerry Kraft practically any tool is, in the language of the men, "that there," and in the language of the girls, a "jigger." "Say, Annie, lend me your jigger?" You have to stop and see what your companion is doing, figure out what tool she may want, then scurry through your toolbox and produce it. At Simpson's borrowing was considered one of the major sins; here at Kerry Kraft we could not live without it. Alas, there is a good deal of unauthorized borrowing, too—a vicious circle, for if someone has lifted your hammer, you lift someone's else's.

My gun-sets for riveting, my beautifully polished and satin-smooth backing bar (which I had nicknamed my "Marvel Magic"), my little case of drills, are put away. In Bench we need only hammers. In Bench we make all the small pieces which Sub-assembly and Final put together. But it is split up into small divisions which are scattered through the building. In ours, Bench S-2, we make nose-ribs for elevator-tabs, a tab being part of an elevator and an elevator being the hinged-on rear part of the plane's tail, which lifts or lowers to make the plane head up or down. After considerable questioning, I learned that our pieces belong to a Navy pursuit for which Kerry Kraft does sub-contracting.

Making our nose-ribs is not very different from other hand metal-work: you file and bend and hammer, and polish off the edge with an emery cloth. When you're done a rackful you take them across the aisle to Inspection, and when Inspection has decided they have no cracks and are more or less the right size, Inspection puts its stamp on them and halloo to you to take them away. Then, down the aisle, past other sections of Bench and past the Paint-shop, we leave them with Gus, of the Heat-treat Department.

Eunice and I, lunch companions now for two months, are accepted as "girl friends." "Say, who's your good-looking girl friend?" one of the "fellows" asked me the other day. "How's about a little introduction?" It wouldn't do him much good, for Eunice is already involved in a love affair. I don't know the particulars but I gather that the path of love is not too smooth. Quite often our lunch period is spent in silence, with Eunice off in a dream, coming back to earth with a little start and a rather sheepish smile. "Don't take it as nothin' personal if I don't tell you all what's on my mind," she said one day. There appears to be some reason why the identity of the lad on whom her affections are centered must be kept secret. Can Eunice be doing a little poaching? I wonder, but I do not ask, and this is appreciated. "One thing I like about you for a friend is you don't ask no questions," Eunice has told me more than once. Neither does she. I doubt if any other two lady-workers in Kerry Kraft know as little about each other's pasts.

Once, catching some betraying remark I had made, Eunice turned to me with a sudden suspicion in her eyes. "Say, Annie, how much schooling did you have?" When I said lightly that, believe it or not, I had got through fourth grade, Gert took it up. "Serious now, how many years?"

I tried to escape. "It seems like hundreds, looking back."

That annoyed Eunice. "Don't go gettin' smart again. What's wrong with tellin' me?"

"Well, I finished high school."

I must have sounded boastful. "What's so wonderful about that?" Gert demanded. "Jeeze, you did, too, didn't you, Eunice?"

"Yes, I graduated. Back in '37."

I thought we would veer off into reminiscence, but Eunice was still not free of suspicion, and she sat looking at me appraisingly. Finally, "You didn't never go to no college, did you?" There was a sort of uncertainty in her voice, a hope for reassurance.

"Me?"

I didn't have to say any more. Gert settled it. "Jeeze, are you nuts?" she asked Eunice. "Her college, did you?" She turned to me. "If I was you, Annie," she said, "I'd slap her ears down for that one."

Q—What is the army's newest method of fighting germs in barracks?

A—Floors are mopped in an oil containing oleic acid, and blankets and bed linen are rinsed in a like solution. The oil traps the germs, reduces spread of respiratory diseases, sore throats, etc.

Q—What is the official religion in Ethiopia?

A—Coptic Christian; the church dates back 1600 years to Egypt. For this reason the archbishop of Ethiopia has always been an Egyptian, but Emperor Haile Selassie says the next will be an Ethiop.

Q—What new method is used to test metals for hardness?

A—A cyclograph, an electronic instrument, measures known hardness of one piece of metal by cathode rays, and a comparison is made with a similar, untested piece. This method replaces a much slower chemical method.

McKENNEY ON BRIDGE

Harry can always be counted upon to come up with a good hand. Here is one he got himself into trying to prepare the hand for three no trump. When his partner bid five diamonds, Fishbein quit.

The opening heart lead was won with the ace, dummy was entered with the king of clubs and the ten of spades was led. East covered and Fishbein won with the ace, and went back to dummy with the ace of clubs. The nine of spades was led, East trumped and returned a heart, which was trumped in dummy with the deuce of diamonds. A low club was played, East discarded a heart and Fishbein ruffed with the seven of diamonds. Another heart was played and ruffed in dummy with the four of diamonds.

Now another club was led, East trumped with the nine and Fishbein over-trumped with the diamond queen. The jack of spades was led, dummy's club was discarded, East was forced to ruff, and found himself end-played into the ace-jack of diamonds.
