teachers, Bill Hembrook, both served in Vietnam.

"He was interested in going to college, and this (military service) was one of the ways he was going to do it," Hembrook said.

When Kevin was home, he worked at Jim Berghammer's dairy farm, just up the road from his parents' home.

"He's a very gentle person. He's good with animals," Berghammer said. "He was good all around ... He was just a plain good kid."

He also loved hunting, fishing and camping, his parents said.

"This community will rally behind him," according to an Arpin business person who asked not to be identified.

"It's a shock that somebody from our hometown" would be killed in the Middle East, said Pat Nelson, owner of Nelson's Hardware Store in Arpin, who knows Kevin's parents.
