8 GERMAN NURSES RETURNED TO LINES

Americans Carry White Flag Into Enemy Territory on Mission

With the American Army at Caumont. (AP) — Eight German nurses, captured in an underground hospital near Cherbourg, were returned by the Americans through enemy lines yesterday in the second no-man's-land truce of the beachhead.

Last Sunday eight nurses taken in the Pasteur Hospital in Cherbourg were returned to their countrymen. The little battlefield drama was repeated yesterday afternoon.

An attempt was made to contact the Germans by radio to arrange the transfer, but the messages were not answered. So in mid-afternoon Lt. Kenneth J. Calligan, Milwaukee, Wis., and an interpreter left the American lines within a hundred yards of this town. They walked slowly toward the enemy lines carrying a white flag.

"We walked for about 600 yards down the road toward Sept Venettes without seeing anything," Calligan said, "and then a voice behind us ordered us to halt. We'd passed through the German position without seeing it."

Pair Blindfolded

Calligan and the interpreter were blindfolded and made to sit on a bank facing the American lines while a German soldier went to find an officer.

"It was one hell of a feeling to be sitting there blindfolded between the lines," Calligan said. "They hadn't heard our radio message and there we were walking right into their positions."

After a few minutes a German captain, a lieutenant and several enlisted men came up and removed the bandages.

"They clicked heels and saluted and asked what we wanted," the lieutenant said. "I explained the situation. They agreed and I came
