

record-breaking wheat yield last year, the crop "continued to stand by itself as a surplus-problem crop even though war pressed its demands for greater production of virtually all other major crops."

He said the wheat carryover jumped from 282,000,000 bushels on July 1, 1942 and that the 1942 crop of about 984,000,000 bushels gave the United States "approximately a two years' supply of wheat on hand."

"We have millions of bushels of wheat not now needed as food," Wickard said, "but the need is urgent for meat and milk and eggs which can be produced from wheat used as feed. If we are to maintain the high level of production of livestock products needed for war, it appears that we shall have to look more and more to wheat as a source of livestock feed."
