

trip to the Miss America pageant in Atlantic City, N.J., in September.

Miss Brahmsteadt made her first official appearance Saturday night at her coronation ball, where she danced with Gov. Warren Knowles.

She stayed briefly at the ball, then returned to her dorm where the girls' chaperons staged a mock coronation ceremony and gave her a crown with a monkey on top and a bouquet of weeds. She finally got to bed at 4 a.m.

Paradise for ducks

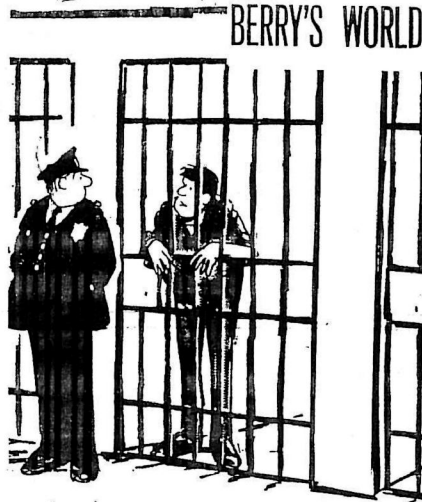

Wisconsin was a paradise for ducks today. Finding ponds and puddles was no problem at all after another night of soaking rains.

Rain was predicted for today, ending in most sections of the state tonight, although there is a chance of a few showers again Wednesday, especially in the east portion of the state. Continued cloudy weather with no important temperature changes was forecast, with the lows tonight in the 50s in the north and west and the low 60s in the extreme southeast.

The cranberry forecast calls for lowest bog temperatures to be in the 40s tonight and from 30 to 35 Wednesday night.

Wisconsin Rapids had a high of 70 and a low of 58 degrees Monday night with .47 inch of precipitation.

"I hope I don't get Dr. Spock for a cellmate — I don't believe in parental permissiveness and I'm a hawk!"

"Sixteen years on the force and this is the worst I've seen," said one constable at the height of the riot in front of the reviewing stand at the St. Jean Baptiste Day parade, high point of French Canada's chief holiday.

The 48-year-old bachelor prime minister shook off persons urging him to leave the stand and watched coolly from the front row as police on horseback and on foot drove back charging demonstrators who hurled bottles, stones, firecrackers and light bulbs filled with paint.

One bottle whizzed past Trudeau's head.

Police said 91 bystanders and 44 policemen were injured. The number of injured rioters was not known, but police arrested him, but 1,400 uniformed police and additional plainclothesmen were on guard, and the prime minister was not harmed.

Trudeau is a native of Quebec but has campaigned on a "one Canada" theme to the chagrin of those seeking a special status if not independence for the province.

For many years there has been a movement to set up the French-speaking province as a separate country, but by all electoral yardsticks the separatists are a small minority.

Trudeau's Liberal party forces expressed confidence they could at least hold their own in Quebec in today's election despite the prime minister's refusal to make concessions to those calling for special privileges for the province.

Nationwide, the election gave 40 million voters the chance to ratify Trudeau as prime minister—or reject him. He moved into the post without a popular mandate when the Liberal party chose him to succeed Lester B. Pearson as its national leader two months ago.

Virtually all polls and newspaper forecasts predicted a victory for Trudeau over Robert Stanfield, the former premier of Nova Scotia who succeeded John Diefenbaker as leader of the Conservative party last year.

Trudeau's Liberals were trying today to do what they never could accomplish under Pearson—win a clearcut majority in the House of Commons. In the last two elections the Liberals emerged as the biggest party but failed of a majority because minor parties splintered the vote.

The Liberals held 131 of 265 seats in the last Commons. The party in power has the right to call a new election any time within a nominal five-year term.

Trudeau's bouncy style reminds many Canadians of the Kennedys. His campaign attracted enthusiastic crowds across the country.

Stanfield, 54, shines more in small gatherings than at mass meetings. His party's advertising presented him as "a man who appeals to the mind."
